

ABSTRACT

In one embodiment, a method for designing a computer system comprises selecting an amount of internal memory for the computer system and providing the amount of internal memory to a non-linear exponential function to calculate a minimum input/output (I/O) transaction rate for transactions associated with a non-volatile memory subsystem appropriate for the amount of internal memory.